The U.S. announced a new foreign aid package for Ukraine on Thursday, in a significant turnaround from the Obama administration's past approach, which critics called too slow to act. The announcement is part of a $1 billion earmark in the White House budget. The package includes $200 million in food aid, $225 million in emergency security assistance, and $325 million for the Ukrainian military. It's a reflection of the new U.S. approach to foreign aid, as the Obama administration's reliance on political support on the left has grown weaker in recent years. ADVERTISEMENT "The budget includes a significant increase in funding for foreign assistance — more than $1.5 billion above last year's level," the White House said in a statement. The U.S. has spent $3.5 billion on foreign aid for Ukraine since last fall, when Ukraine's pro-Russian president was ousted. The U.S. has said it would continue to provide aid to Ukraine until its government — which is opposed to the current president's newly minted government in Russia — has a freely elected leader. But the Obama administration has said it was slow to act until former President Viktor Yanukovich was driven from power, because of his ties to Russia and his track record of violence against protesters. That timeline is now being reset. "Earlier in the year, we saw efforts to delay [foreign aid] from the Congress, and we moved quickly to make sure that it was coming in," said Deputy National Security Adviser for Europe and Eurasia Ben Rhodes. The main beneficiary of the new aid package will be the Ukrainian military, which hasn't received funding for several years. That problem is expected to be addressed soon. The other $200 million will go toward food aid. Ukraine has been crippled by the ongoing conflict between pro-Russia separatists and Ukrainian forces. The U.S. foreign aid package in Ukraine is dwarfed by the nearly $50 billion in U.S. foreign assistance that goes to Israel, and by the $1.8 billion in foreign assistance to Egypt, which are not part of new earmarks in the White House budget. But the $1.5 billion total earmark also represents a significant increase over what the U.S. has previously
